

UNIVERSITY OF DELHI

INSTITUTE OF POST GRADU-ATE (E) STUDIES LIBRARY

HG

Cl. No. R66:9
Ac. No. E9137

This book should be returned on or before the last date stamped below. An overdue charge of 5 Paise 25 Paise (Text-books) will be collected for each day the book is kept overtime. 11 4-72

[illegible]

Compromises in the History OF Advaitic Thought

BY

MM. PROF. S. KUPPUSWAMI SASTRI

M.A., I.E.S. (Retired)

WITH A FOREWORD

BY

DR. SIR S. RADHAKRISHNAN

THE KUPPUSWAMI SASTRI

RESEARCH INSTITUTE

MADRAS

1946

Copyright

[Re. One & As. Four.]

FOREWORD

THE late Mahamahopadhyaya Professor S. Kuppuswami Sastri was one of the greatest Sankritists of our generation. While he trained a good many scholars in Samskrit learning and criticism, it is a matter of regret to those who knew the depth, extent and accuracy of his learning that he did not leave behind many publications. The Research Institute founded in his name has for one of its objects the publication of his scattered writings and lectures. In pursuance of this aim, this book on Compromises in Advaitic Thought is brought out. The book illustrates with a wealth of learning and critical penetration, the central characteristic of the Hindu mind, the spirit of comprehension as distinct from that of exclusion. It is this feature which has enabled the Hindu mind in the past to welcome new ideas and integrate them to the master plan of Hindu thought. When the spirit declined, our cultural progress got arrested. The revival of the spirit to-day will help us to take up and answer the challenge of modern times. Loyalty to the ancient tradition of India, Professor Kuppuswami Sastri's lectures make out, requires us to move forward, and not stand still, in the world of philosophic and religious thought.

S. RADHAKRISHNAN.

THESE lectures were delivered by Mahamahopadhyaya Professor S. Kuppuswami Sastri as the Rao Bahadur K. Krishnaswami Rao Endowment Lectures under the auspices of the Madras University on the 16th and 17th February, 1940.

The authorities of the Kuppuswami Sastri Research Institute are thankful to Sri G. K. Seshagiri son of the late Professor, for presenting to the Institute the Manuscript and Typescript copies of these lectures

The following scholars were in charge of this publication : Professor M. Hiriyanna, Professor K. A. Nilakanta Sastri, Dr. T. R. Chintamani and Dr. V. Raghavan.

॥ ओम् शान्तिः शान्तिः शान्तिः ॥

COMPROMISES IN THE HISTORY OF ADVAITIC THOUGHT

FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES TO THE DAYS OF BRAHMĀNANDA SARASVATI]

LECTURE I

FRIENDS,

I am thankful to the Syndicate of the Madras University for the honour they have done me by inviting me to deliver this year¹, the lectures instituted in commemoration of Dewan Bahadur K. Krishnaswami Rao. I have undertaken to lecture to you on compromises in the development of advaitic thought. There will be two lectures. In the first lecture, to-night, I propose to speak chiefly about certain typical cases of accommodation, which are worthy of notice in the course of the development of Advaitic thought during the Vedic age and the early post-Vedic age. The second lecture, which will be delivered to-morrow, will comprise two parts, the former of which will deal with the noteworthy instances of compromise during the later post-Vedic age, and the latter will suggest the lines on which all these cases of compromise may be evaluated.

Accommodation, economy, management, conformity or compromise—these terms stand for a pacific, conciliatory, synthesising attitude of mind, tending to differences being minimised and settled through adjustment of principles and views. As stated by John Morley,¹ “the one commanding law is that men should cling to truth and right, if the very heavens fall. In principle, this is universally accepted. To the partisans of authority and tradition it is as much a commonplace as to the partisans of the most absolute and unflinching rationalism. Yet in practice all schools alike are forced to admit the necessity of a measure of accommodation in the very interests of truth itself.” All the results of the working of the spirit of accommodation or compromise in the interests of truth would come under the category of what may be called legitimate compromise. Many other kinds of accommodation, resting mainly on the “paramount wisdom of counting the narrow, immediate, and personal expediency” and making chiefly for individual gain in the shape of immediate material benefit or emotional gratification are of the sordid type of what may be called illegitimate compromise.

It would be of great interest and value to study the various results of accommodation in the development of Advaitic thought through the different ages of intellectual life, which, for the sake of convenience, may be described as the early Vedic period, the later Vedic period, mainly the age of the Upaniṣads, the pre-

¹ Morley: “On Compromise,” pp. 3-5, Eversley edn.

Śaṅkara stage in the post-Vedic age, including the epic and purāṇic ages, the age of Śaṅkara, the early post-Śaṅkara period, down to the end of the eleventh century A.D., and the later post-Śaṅkara period, from Śrī Harṣa (twelfth century A.D.) down to Brahmanānda Sarasvatī (circa eighteenth century A.D.). In this kind of study, the demands of historical criticism would require some attention being paid to the more prominent types, at least, of accommodative or compromising suppression of Advaita and secession from it.

The early Vedic period.—During this period, the progress of philosophical thinking along the groove of Advaitic thought may be taken to have reached its culminating point in the monistic absolute boldly intuited by some R̥gvedic seers in the well-known verses:—
“Reality is the One, whom the wise call by many names, Agni, Yama, and Mātariśvan”

“एकं सद्विप्रा बहुधा वदन्ति

अग्निं यमं मातरिश्वानमाहुः ।” (I-164-46).

“That one breathed, windless, by its own power”.

“आनीदवातं स्वधया तदेकम् ” (X-129-2).

To attempt to read into these old verses of the R̥gveda the Advaitic theory in its finished form, with the concept of the One Absolute Existent as the real substratum (Adhiṣṭhāna) of the whole phenomenal world of names and forms (nāmarūpātma-prapañca) and of Māyā, as the incomprehensible matrix of the world, would become easily liable to the charge of anachronism. However, with a little stretch of imagination, one might find in the two hymns—R.V. I, 164 and X. 129—read together, an unmistakable foreshadowing of vacillation, unintentional or otherwise, in the process of thinking—that kind of vacillation which generally precedes accommodations emerging from conflicts of mutually impingent factors—such as the One, to which thinking inherently tends and the many which thinking inherently shuns. “Darkness was in the beginning hidden by darkness; indistinguishable, this all was water. That, which, coming into being, was covered with the void, that One arose through the power of heat.” X. 129-3.

तम आसीत्तमसा गूह्यमग्रेऽ-

प्रकेतं सलिलं सर्वमा इदम् ।

तुच्छेनाम्बपिहितं यदासीत्

तपस्तन्महिना जायतैकम् ॥ X-129-3.

Pursuing this line of thought, it would be scarcely difficult to realise the accommodative significance of the expression ‘call variously’ (bahudhā vadanti) in the former verse from the first Maṇḍala, while it would be certainly difficult to miss the compromise sought to be effectuated between the original One and the originated many through tamas (darkness) and tucchya (non-existent or void)—two concepts lending themselves to equation, as Sāyana points out, with the positive entity of nescience which is neither existent nor non-existent and described in later Advaitic works as sadasadvilakṣaṇa-bhāvarūpājñāna.

That the spirit of compromise was perhaps*the dominating feature of all types of religious and philosophical thinking in the R̥gvedic age is not at all difficult to maintain. In fact, this would be a very reasonable thesis to put forward, seeing how, as Prof. Max Muller pointed out, the accommodative vacillation in the religion of the R̥gveda was constantly manifesting itself in the henotheistic exaltations of different deities, in the course of progress towards monotheism, pantheism and monism, and considering how the R̥gveda-saṁhitā strikes a highly significant note in the concluding hymn, in the verse, “Sam̐gacchadhvam, saṁvāda-dhvam, saṁ vō manāṁsi jānatām”, ‘Meet together, talk together (in an accommodative spirit, so as to give and take, to live and let live) and may your mind apprehend (the truth) alike.’ It is noteworthy that the central concept of saṁvāda in this verse, as opposed to vivāda, comprises the spirit of compromise, as one of its essential components, and perhaps, in this way, by encouraging an ever-increasing stress on saṁvāda, saṁpratīpatti, parasparabhāvanā—mutual adjustment, mutual regard and mutual concession, in the sphere of thinking, speaking and doing (manas, vāk, kāya):—thus, perhaps, it is that, all through the ages, the cultural life of India has been growing, with its distinctive features of absorption, tolerance, synthesis and accommodation. We may be forcefully reminded at this stage of what Manu—one of our oldest lawgivers—has said about the accommodation of satya with priya—of what is true with what is agreeable, beautiful and good.

सत्यं ब्रूयात् प्रियं ब्रूयाच्च ब्रूयात् सत्यमप्रियम् ।

प्रियं च नानृतं ब्रूयादेष धर्मः सनातनः ॥

Manusmṛti IV, 138.

This great maxim deserves to be amplified fully in a discourse on compromise; and such amplifications, as are relevant, are reserved for the latter part of the second lecture in connection with the evaluation of the different kinds of compromise adverted to.

Later Vedic period—The age of the Upaniṣads. Some alien scholars, well-intentioned and known for their thoroughness, have attempted to study the Upaniṣads and find out their dominating theme, without giving due weight to the traditions of Indian thought, which form the background of the Upaniṣads. The results of this kind of study, even in the case of the earlier group of Upaniṣads constituting the basic Śrutis on which the whole structure of the Vedānta-darśana rests, such as the Bṛhadāraṇyaka and the Chāndogya, are found embodied in two propositions:—that the fundamental part of the Upaniṣads is all thaumaturgy, and that all the vedāntic Upaniṣads, in the form in which they are available to us, are illogical strings of disjecta membra, belonging to different types of thought and different stages of development and any effort to find unity of thought in any of the vedāntic Upaniṣads or to discover their dominating theme would be merely ploughing the sands. These two propositions have not found any encouragement at the hands of Indian scholars and have been viewed with strong disfavour, particularly by those scholars, Indian as well as foreign, who have carefully studied the vedāntic Upaniṣads, in the light of such aspects of the cultural traditions of India as deserve due consideration in the interpretation of ancient Indian texts. The best and the most thorough going exposition of the philosophy of the Upaniṣads, with special reference to the original texts and the traditional culture of India, that has so far been undertaken and successfully completed by any foreign scholar is what Dr. Deussen has given to the world in his treatise on the philosophy of the Upaniṣads. Many Indian scholars who are sufficiently familiar with Dr. Deussen's works would readily acclaim Dr. Deussen as one of the greatest Śāṅkarites of the modern world, who happens to be clothed in Kantian garb by the accident of birth. With a remarkably high degree of perspicacity, Dr. Deussen rightly lays hold of the principle of accommodation, which has been freely and frequently used by later vedāntist teachers in explaining many a clash or hitch in the process of vedāntic thinking and points out that "the idea of accommodation becomes a key which is fitted to unlock the secrets not only of the doctrinal developments of the Upaniṣads, but of many analogous phenomena in Western philosophy."¹ An important limitation of this accommodation theory is, as Dr. Deussen points out, that the accommodative adjustments may have been unintentional in many cases; and in many, others, as an attempt at a fair evaluation of them will reveal, it must be remembered that they are believed to be necessary and legitimate, though intentional.

¹ See page ix of the author's preface—English translation of Deussen's work—"The Philosophy of the Upaniṣads".

A few typical instances of accommodative adjustments in the Upaniṣads may now be considered. Upaniṣadic thought uses two brief mystical formulas—“Amṛtam satyena channam” (Brh. I, vi, 3)—“the immortal (Brahman) veiled by the (empirical) reality;” and “Satyasya satyam” (Brh. II, vii, 6)—“the reality of reality”. Such formulas are frequently employed by Yājñavalkya and many other Upaniṣadic teachers. In such formulas, the working of the accommodative spirit is plainly discernible in applying the term satya (reality) to the empirical world of plurality revealed by experiential knowledge as contrasted with the “reality of reality” (Satyasya satyam), while, in fact, Brahman or Ātman is the only reality. In accommodative formulas of this type, one may easily find the source of the compromise adopted by later Vedāntists in all their explanations in which they draw a distinction between phenomenal or empirical reality (vyāvahārika-sattā) and absolute reality (pāramārthika-sattā).

The earliest Upaniṣads, the Brhadāranyaka and the Chāndogya, describe Brahman as the One, incomprehensible, absolute reality, and the later Upaniṣads amplify this description in poetic style by means of paradoxes suggesting a negation of all empirical attributes. The Brhadāranyaka text—“Athāta ādeśo neti neti” (II, iii, 6) directly conveys the incomprehensibility of Brahman. Nevertheless, all the Upaniṣads are very particular about equating Brahman with Being (sat), Consciousness (cit) and Bliss (ānanda). The Bṛhadāraṇyaka text "Vijñānam ānandam Brahma (Bṛh. III, ix, 28) and the Taittirīya text "Satyam jñānam anantam" (Taittirīya, II. 1) are too well known to need any special amplification. In these two texts, one can easily find the source of the later formula—Saccidānanda-rūpam Brahma, so often repeated in later texts as well as popular parlance that it has become a common practice in Hindu society to use it (saccidānanda) as a proper name. The Upaniṣads are all emphatic about the incomprehensibility of Brahman; however, the process of thought and exposition adopted by great Upaniṣadic teachers like Yājñavalkya is often constrained to use positive terms like sat, cit and ānanda and thereby accommodate itself to the inveterate habit of thinking in positive terms, which the human mind has formed. In considering the accommodative process involved in the idea behind the formula—saccidānanda, a shrewd philosophical critic may also pause, by the way, to admire the farsightedness of Upaniṣadic philosophers in equating Brahman not merely with cit but with sat and ānanda. In this connection, Dr. Deussen regretfully remarks "that the philosophising spirit of mankind in India, Greece and modern times has, with remarkable unanimity, fallen into an error, which we can most briefly describe by the word intellectualism".¹

¹ See p. 132, "The Philosophy of the Upaniṣads" by Deussen—English translation.

• This criticism overlooks the fact that sat in the Upaniṣadic thought, as Dr. Deussen himself has repeatedly pointed out, comprehends the whole province of reality, the outer world as well as the inner nature of man. If the advaitic Absolute were equated with consciousness (cit) alone, the Advaita doctrine would have easily come within the ambit of the charge of cold intellectualism. But Yājñavalkya and other Upaniṣadic philosophers describe cit as 'the light of lights, (jyōtiṣām jyotiḥ:(Gītā, xiii, 17) svayam jyotiḥ puruṣaḥ, (Br. up. iv, iii. 9), and the concept of cit in the saccidānanda equation stands hemmed in between the existential and emotional aspects of reality (sat and ānanda) and thus merged in the highest peak of advaitic synthesis, viz., saccidānanda-rūpa-brahman.)

Every careful student of the chief vedāntic Upaniṣads is apt to be strongly impressed with the type of accommodation which has found a sufficiently prominent place for the pantheistic mode of thinking in the Upaniṣadic thought 'without abandoning the fundamental idealistic principle, by conceding the reality of the manifold universe, but at the same time maintaining that this manifold universe is in reality Brahman (Sarvam khalvidam Brahma—Chānd. III, xiv. 1). Here, idealism accommodates itself to the realistic view of the world and presents itself as pantheism.¹ It would be interesting to note how the empirical category of causa-lity is introduced to remove the obscurity felt in the nature of the relation of identity between Ātman and Universe, how in a later stage, represented by the Śvetāśvatara and Mahānārāyaṇa, the supreme and individual souls appear in marked contrast with each other, and theism emerges in a definite form and accommodates itself to the earlier types of thought—advaitic idealism and pantheism.

¹ Cf. Deussen's Philosophy of the Upaniṣads, 159—162 335—361, 398—405.

The original form of the doctrine of emancipation (mukti), as it appeared in the earliest Upaniṣads, is that the intuitive knowledge of Ātman is itself emancipation. Strictly speaking, in its original form, mukti in the advaitic sense is only Jīvanmukti and it is not a becoming something. The Kaṭha text—vimuktaśca vimucyate (V: 1) throws a flood of light on the manner in which the later contrast between mukti before the cessation of corporeal existence (Jīvanmukti) and final deliverance after the cessation of corporeal existence (videhamukti), arose and grew from the Upaniṣadic accommodation of the advaitic truth of Ātman being eternally mukta to the empirical way of fancying Ātman as becoming a mukta; and this kind of compromise with empirical modes of thinking led to the formation of eschatological theories, like the theory of the way of the gods (deva-yāna), on which the muktas were led after death through a series of attractive intermediate stages to union with Brahman.

In the early post-Vedic stage, the epic and purāṇic ages evolved numerous interesting compromises in the sphere of religion and philosophy. The greatest monument of the spirit of accommodation and compromise, viewed as one of the most potent of the factors contributing to the conservation, continuity and growth of Hinduism, is the Bhagavad-gītā. The Gītā is called a Yoga-śāstra chiefly because its preponderant note is a synthesis of all the ways of spiritual life, with their shifting emphasis laid alternately on true insight (jñāna), genuine devotion (bhakti) and dedicated service (karma), through all legitimate types of compromise. If the workings of the spirit of accommodation in the sphere of the religion of the R̥gveda could be summed up in the novel term 'Henotheism' brought into vogue by Professor Max Muller, similar accommodative processes may be described by the term 'Henopatism',¹ signifying an accommodative synthesis of diverse ways of living leading to the final goal. The most telling type of compromise, which the Gītā teaches between the highest type of jñāna and the numerous kinds of karma which a person has to do is found incorporated in verses 11 to 26 in Chapter III. Three striking ideas, which may be of great value, or principles underlying certain important, useful and legitimate types of compromise, emerge from these verses:—the need for giving and taking (paraspara-bhāvanā); adherence to the established ways of the world with a view to its orderly maintenance and healthy advancement (loka-saṁgraha); avoidance of a revolutionary unsettlement of the minds of the ignorant and lifting them up by setting a healthy and feasible example in one's own conduct.

¹ Heis (hen) Gk. = One; Patos. = Gk. = (Cf. Path, Panthāh, —Skt.) = Bridge.

देवान् भावयतानेन ते देवा भावयन्तु वः ।

परस्परं भावयन्तः श्रेयः परमवाप्स्यथ ॥ 3-11

“With this shall ye cherish the gods, and the gods shall cherish you. Thus cherishing one another, ye will obtain the highest good.”

कर्मणैव हि संसिद्धिमास्थिता जनकादयः ।

लोकसंग्रहमेवापि संपश्यन्कर्तुमर्हसि ॥ 3-20

“It is by works alone that men like Janaka became blest; and works thou shouldst also do with a view to maintaining the world.”

यद्यदाचरति श्रेष्ठस्तत्तदेवेतरो जनः ।

स यत्प्रमाणं कुरुते लोकस्तदनुवर्तते ॥ 3-21

“Whatever a great man does, the same is done by others as well. He sets up a standard and it is followed by the world.”

सक्ताः कर्मण्यविद्वांसो यथा कुर्वन्ति भारत ।

कुर्याद्विद्वांस्तथासक्ताश्चिकीर्षुर्लोकसंग्रहम् ॥ 3-25

“As ignorant men act from attachment to their work, O Bharata, so too should an enlightened man act, but without any attachment, so that he may maintain the order of the world.”

न बुद्धिभेदं जनयेदज्ञानां कर्मसङ्गिनाम् ।

जोषयेत्सर्वकर्माणि विद्वान्युक्तः समाचरन् ॥ 3-26

“Let no enlightened man unsettle the minds of the ignorant, who are attached to their work. Himself doing all works, with faith, he should make others do so as well.”

In these verses, a careful thinker cannot miss the excellent accommodative device, which Śrī Bhagavān Kṛṣṇa has furnished in the shape of ‘selfless work in a spirit of dedication’, whenever one’s mind happens to be agitated over the collision between the ideal of right conduct and the trans-moral, advaitic ideal of self-realisation (ātma-jñāna), as taught in the Hindu scriptures.

The Śrīmad-bhāgavata is the greatest monument of compromise, typifying the developments distinctive of the later stages of the Purāṇic age. In this Purāṇa, there is a clear elevation of the ideal of bhakti-yoga and an equally clear endeavour to adjust it to the Advaita ideal of jñāna and the Advaita doctrine of identity between Brahman and jīva (God and man). Attention is solicited in this connection to these two verses extracted from the Śrīmad-bhāgavata.

“या निर्वृतिस्तनुमृतां तव पादपद्म-

ध्यानाद्भवजनकयाश्रवणेन वा स्यात् ।

सा ब्रह्मणि स्वमहिमन्यपि नाय मा भूत्

किं त्वन्तकासिलुलितात्पततां विमानात् ॥

[श्रीभागवते ध्रुवस्तुतौ ।]

IV. ix. II.

नैवात्मनः प्रभुरयं निजलाभपूर्णो

मानं जनादविदुषः करुणो वृणीते ।

यद्यज्जनो भगवते विदधीत मानं

तच्चात्मने प्रतिमुखस्य यथा मुखश्रीः ॥

[श्रीभागवते प्रह्लादस्तुतौ ।]

VII. ix. 10.

In the former of the two extracts, devotion to Kṛṣṇa is exalted above the realisation of the advaitic Brahman. In the latter, the advaitic theory of jīva being the reflection (pratibimba) of Īśvara (viewed as bimba) is used in explaining the idea that a worshipper is really worshipping himself by worshipping God.

LECTURE II

The former part of this lecture will be devoted to a brief account of the compromises which are associated with the names of Bādarāyaṇa, Jaimini, Bhartṛprapañca, Brahmadatta, Kumārila, Prabhākara, Gauḍapāda and Maṇḍanamiśra, representing the pre-Śaṅkara stage in the development of Advaita during the later post-Vedic period; those which are advocated by Śaṅkara, Padmapāda, Vācaspati, Udayana, Vimuktātman, Sarvajñātman, Ānandabodha and Śrī Harṣa; those which are found incorporated in the systems of Rāmānuja and Madhva; and lastly, those compromises which are found advocated by Vijñānabhikṣu, Appayyadikṣita, Madhusūdana-sarasvatī and Brahmānandasarasvatī. The latter part of this lecture will endeavour to give a brief estimate of these compromises.

BADARAYANA AND JAIMINI.—Bādarāyaṇa and Jaimini are the earliest systematic and authoritative exponents of the principles of exegesis, as applicable to the Jñāna-kāṇḍa and the Karma-kāṇḍa of the Veda. According to some later Advaitins like Sureśvara (see Naiṣkarmyasiddhi, p. 52), Bādarāyaṇa and Jaimini were both of them Brahma-vādins and old Advaitins. They provided Indian exegesis with highly elastic principles of interpretation which were all developed round the pivotal principle of thought-unity or sentence-unity—the samanvaya of the Brahmasūtras and the eka-vākyatā of the Karma-mīmāṃsā-sūtras; and they were perhaps satisfied that the accommodative processes resulting from a wide use of the principles of samanvaya and eka-vākyatā by competent thinkers would eventually lead to the establishment of the Advaita doctrine, together with all the admissible ways of compromise. Bādarāyaṇa and Jaimini themselves would appear to have exercised a wise reticence in respect of their own philosophical convictions. Perhaps they believed that philosophical thinking and the quest for truth would gain immensely by their Sūtras being so composed as to admit of use by several bhāṣyakāras in support of Advaita, Viśiṣṭādvaita and Dvaita.

PRAPANCAPRAVILAYA-VADA.—A careful examination of the Upaniṣads would reveal that many a gentle and acceptable device came to be adopted as transitional adaptations for facilitating the shifting of stress in thought and conduct from the ritualism of the Brāhmaṇas to the Upaniṣadic doctrine of self-realisation. One of those devices is the association of a suitable meditative process with some appropriate karma or karmāṅga, so that the karma itself may be gradually replaced by a suitable mental process—dhyāna or jñāna.

There are references in the works of Śaṅkara¹ Sureśvara and later writers, which show that in the pre-Śaṅkara stage, groups of philosophers called prapañcapravilaya-vādinah and kāma-pradhvaṁsa-vādinah arose.² Their method is a somewhat forced accommodation between the ritualistic sections of the Veda known as karma-kāṇḍa and the Upaniṣads forming the jñāna-kāṇḍa. They sought to subordinate the whole ritualistic scheme to jñāna, by putting forward the negative view that every injunction or prohibition in the karma-kāṇḍa is intended to keep a person engaged in a particular act so that he might eliminate the rest and avoid yielding to impulses of various kinds and sublimate his self gradually and realise its true nature as transcending the world (niṣprapañca). This view called prapañca-pravilaya-vāda is found set forth and criticised by Śaṅkara and post-Śaṅkara Vedāntins, and it is specifically ascribed to an old school of Advaitins, Jaranmāyāvādinah, as Sudarśanabhaṭṭa describes them.¹ The whole spirit of the prapañca-pravilaya-vāda may be embodied in a telling epigram like this:—

¹ E. g. Śaṅkara on Vedānta Sūtra, III, ii, 21,

² See Prof. M. Hiriyanna, J.O.R., Madras, Vol. I, pp. 109—116.

“Ay is otherwise nay, to get at is to forego, to do is to forbear, and to enjoy is to cloy.”

Numerous accommodative processes of the nature of adhyāropa (supposititious make-shift) and apavāda (eventual elimination of make-shifts by outgrowing them) were advocated in the Upaniṣads in teaching Advaita and came to be crystallised in post-Upaniṣadic Advaita in the oft-quoted dictum—

अध्यारोपापवादाम्यां निष्प्रपञ्चं प्रपञ्चयते ।

Though it may be quite legitimate to attempt to familiarise thought with the acosmic (niṣprapañca)

¹ Srutaprakāśikā on I. i. 4.

aspect of Brahman, by a series of unobjectionable adhyāśāpas, the accommodation in the prapañca-pravilaya theory did not find favour with the majority of Vedāntins, chiefly on account of the obvious risk of a moral bankruptcy or chaos, which could be justly apprehended as a very probable consequence of the practical applications of that theory in life.

BHATTA KUMARILA, the leading exponent of the Bhāṭṭa school, and PRABHAKARA, with whose name the Prābhākara school is prominently associated, were both of them well-disposed to the Advaita doctrine and give indications of their preference for that doctrine, in their works—the Śloka-vārttika, the Tantra-vārttika and the Bṛhatī. Prabhākara's observations, in the concluding part of the ātma-vāda in his Bṛhatī, are very significant in this connection. It is clear that Prabhākara believes in the soundness of the advaitic theory of adhyāśa and also in the soundness of the admonition conveyed in the Gita text "Na buddhibhedam janayed ajñānām karmasaṅginām"

यदुक्तम्—“अहंकारममकारावनात्मन्यात्माभिमानौ” इति मृदितकषायाणामेवैतत् कथनीयम्, न कर्मसङ्गिनामित्युपरम्यते । आह च भगवान् द्वैपायनः “न बुद्धिभेदं जनयेदज्ञानां कर्मसङ्गिनाम्” इति रहस्याधिकारे ।

(Madras University edition of Bṛhatī, p. 256). Prabhākara's attitude towards the advaitic theory of adhyāśa, and ātman as the only reality is typical of the pro-Advaita bent of the early Mīmāṃsakas who would not hesitate to go to the length of suppression and accommodation, in those cases where adequate justification could be found for these processes in the interests of Advaitic truth and in the environment of the people to whom that truth had to be taught.

BHARTĒPRAPAṆCA and BRAHMADATTA, who belonged to the pre-Śaṅkara stage in the history of Advaita, lost their nerve in their allegiance to Advaita. Bhartṛprapañca's views regarding the advaitic theory are available in the references found in the works of Śaṅkara and Sureśvara. The post-Śaṅkara survivals of Bhartṛprapañca's views are used by Bhāskara in his bhāṣya on the Brahmasūtras.¹ Bhartṛprapañca found handy the convenient and highly accommodative concept of difference-cum-identity (bhedābheda) which had already been introduced in philosophical thinking and proceeded to build up a monistic scheme of unity in which Brahman, Jīva and the world found their place as different entities, without abandoning the reality of any of them. The compromise of bhedābheda-vāda adopted by Bhartṛprapañca led ultimately to his secession from the acosmic form of Advaita and to the formation of a special group of bhedābheda-vādins of whom Bhāskara was the most prominent in the post-Śaṅkara stage.

BRAHMADATTA was a pre-Śaṅkara Advaitin, who was very particular about the adjustments which should be effected between the advaitic ideal of Brahman-

¹ For instance on Vedānta Sūtras, I, i, 4. and II, i, 13. See also Prof. P. N. Srinivasacharya: The Philosophy of Bhedābheda.

realisation and the discipline of karma. He attempted to effect the needed compromise by his dhyāna-niyoga-vāda and samuccaya-vāda. According to him, Jīva originates from Brahman and gets absorbed in it at the time of liberation; the final liberation is achieved by a co-ordination of karma with jñāna and through the contemplation of Jīva as identical with Brahman; and the central teaching of the Upaniṣads is to be found in the injunctions requiring the constant meditation of Jīva as Brahman, till the end of life.¹

Among the pre-Śaṅkara Advaitins, GAUDAPADA and MANDANAMISRA are the most outstanding thinkers representing the Advaita doctrine as it stood before Śaṅkara. Gauḍapāda has developed an aspect of the Advaita doctrine which lent itself readily to being used as the basis of the Śaṅkara form of Advaita. Maṇḍanamīśra's exposition of the Advaita doctrine, in so far as it could be studied in the Brahmasiddhi, preserved the fundamental part of the Upaniṣadic Advaita and advocated some noteworthy compromises with non-advaitic modes of thought. Though Maṇḍanamīśra is one of the elder contemporaries of Śaṅkara, the heritage of pre-Śaṅkara compromises which he advocates in his work, would make it more appropriate to refer to him as a pre-Śaṅkara Advaitin.

Gauḍapāda has placed himself on the highest peak, of Advaitic thought and has declared the highest truth in the Kārikā

¹ See Prof. M. Hiriyanna's article "Brahmadatta, an Old Vedāntin", in J.O.R., Madras, Vol. II, pp. 1—9.

न निरोधो न चोत्पत्तिः न बद्धो न च साधकः । न मुमुक्षुर्न वै मुक्त इत्येषा परमार्थता ॥

II-32.

“No dissolution; no origination; none in bondage; none disciplining himself towards release; none seeking release; and likewise, none becoming released—this is the great truth.” Still, in his Kārikā, he sees the need for accommodating his great intuition of Advaita with what he regards as sattarka, sound reasoning, and adjusts himself, at every important stage of his exposition, to the requirements of rationalism, and points out how the highest acme of harmony, which he calls avirodha-yoga, avivāda-yoga, nirdvandva-yoga, advaya-yoga, amatva-yoga, can be realised only in the Advaitic scheme of thought and life. Only a true Advaitin can afford to adopt and advocate the most far-reaching type of compromise without any risk to truth and any disadvantage to the ordinary world:—

त्वसिद्धान्तव्यवस्थासु द्वैतिनो निश्चिता दृढम् । परस्परं विरुद्धयन्ते तैरयं न विरुद्धयते ॥

III-17.

Two of the verses in the concluding portion of Gauḍapāda's Kārikā are full of significance in more than one direction :

अजे साम्ये तु ये केचिद् भविष्यन्ति सुनिश्चिताः । ते हि लोके महाज्ञानाः तच्च लोको न गाहते ॥

IV-95.

दुर्दर्शमतिगम्भीरमञ्जं साम्यं विशारदम् ।

बुद्धौ पदमनानात्वं नमस्तुर्मो यथाबलम् ॥

1V-100.

In these two verses, Gauḍapāda indicates how the highest peak of advaitic thought is too high to be reached by ordinary people, and even a great gifted soul like Gauḍapāda cannot stand long on this height and has to get down to lower levels to accommodate himself to ordinary ways of thinking and speaking. Gauḍapāda says " Namaskurmo yathābalam ". Namaskāra to nir-guṇabrahman—the attributeless absolute—presupposes accommodation; the expression yathābalam (according to strength) clearly refers to the need for varying the modes of adjustment according to the requirements of the thinkers concerned.

Of the pre-Śaṅkara Vedāntins who continued to be active thinkers as elder contemporaries of Śaṅkara, Maṇḍanamīśra is the most prominent. He inherited the Upaniṣadic tradition of Advaita along with the ideas associated with the Śabdādvaita mode of Advaitic thought, advocated by Vaiyākaraṇa philosophers like Bhartṛhari. Maṇḍanamīśra adopts and advocates certain valuable compromises in advaitic epistemology, advaitic ontology and advaitic ethics. In Maṇḍana's opinion, the anyathā-khyāti or the viparīta-khyāti of the Bhāṭṭas should for all practical purposes be accepted; and when the nature of the object of erroneous cognition is examined, this theory has to be reduced inevitably to a form in which it becomes hardly distinguishable from the anirvacanīya-khyāti of the Advaitins. He definitely argues in favour of the view that the Jīva should be regarded as the locus of avidyā (nescience), which obscures the true nature of Brahman and thus has Brahman as its object (viśaya); and in doing this, he clearly accommodates himself to the prevailing theistic sentiment against the view that Brahman is both the āśraya and viśaya of avidyā. Maṇḍana maintains what is known in Advaitic literature as the doctrine of prasamkhyāna and holds that the indirect knowledge of Brahman, arising from texts like tat tvam asi should pass through the furnace of meditation (upāsana) before the detrac- tive and recessive elements of relation and mediacy could be removed from it, and before it could be refined into the pure, efficient and direct realisation of the Absolute Real (Brahma-sākṣātkāra). Here, Maṇḍana is accommodating himself to the common view that śabda can generate only an indirect cognition having a relational content. Maṇḍana's name has come to be prominently associated with bhāvādvaita ('ens-monism'), not so much for the reason that he considers avidyā-dhvamsa to be a real factor, as for the marked manner in which he stresses the reality of prapañcābhāva in the concluding part of his Brahmasiddhi (p. 157) and emphatically declares it to form the final and otherwise unascertainable import of Vedāntic texts. Herein a discerning student of Advaita may easily see Maṇḍana's readiness to compromise with Dvaita, where absolutely necessary. In fact, two famous Dvaita writers—the authors of the Nyāyāmṛta and of the Taraṅgiṇī—have brought out the significance of this accommodation by equating bhāvādvaita with what may be called abhāvādvaita.¹ Again Maṇḍana is prepared to accept Bhartṛhari's śabdādvaita in so far as it does not come into conflict with the brahmādvaita for which he himself stands. Maṇḍana rejects Śaṅkara's view about the antithesis between karma and jñāna and gives his own verdict in favour of a certain type of jñāna-karma-samuccaya in which karma, in the form of agnihotra and such other sacrifices or at least in the form of meditation, has an important place and function in the final stage of the causal scheme necessary to bring about Brahman-realisation. In the concluding part of his work, Brahmasiddhi, Maṇḍana points out, in an accommodative spirit, how vedāntic texts may be linked with purposeful activity (pravṛtti) by taking into account the pravṛtti in the direction of the meditation necessary for transforming the indirect verbal cognition arising from the mahāvākyas, into direct Brahman-realisation.

SAMKARA, the greatest of Advaita teachers has confined himself in his works to certain very legitimate types of accommodation for which one could find adequate support in the Upaniṣads. In his brilliant statement of the theory of adhyāsa, he clearly shows how the recognition of ajñāna or nescience as a beginningless, indefinable, positive entity is the least objectionable solution for all the difficulties felt by philosophers in bringing together the one and the many, reality and non-reality, Brahman and prapañca, satya and anyta.

¹ See Nyāyāmṛta I. 23. p. 198; Cf. also IV. 1.

He realises clearly that the differences revealed in experience cannot be all reduced to nullity, and that they cannot be as real as Brahman or ātman—the reality of reality (satyasya satyam) spoken of in the Upaniṣads. He utilises effectively this upaniṣadic suggestion by recognising a contrast, purely tentative as it may be in Advaitic thought, between absolute reality (pāramārthika-sattā) and relative reality (vyāvahārika-sattā). He has developed this type of compromise in his works in such a way that the adverse comments usually made by certain thinkers on the Śāṅkarite scheme of thought might lose their force on scrutiny. Repeatedly he emphasises the idea that the world is mithyā only in the sense that it is anirvacanīya. For all practical purposes in life, the world is as important to Śaṅkara as to anybody else. The very first expression that he uses in his monumental bhāṣya on the Brahmasūtras is a strong evidence in favour of his readiness to make all reasonable concessions to the realist ways of thinking. Further, in his minor works especially, as also in his bhāṣyas, he has definitely indicated the limits within which accommodation to the theistic sentiment would be sufficiently warranted in Advaitic thought. The distinction between para-vidyā (Brahman-realisation) and aparavidyā, as represented by all forms of knowledge within the empirical sphere tending to the achievement of the goal of para-vidyā, which has its root in the Upaniṣads themselves (cf. Praśna Up., v. 2), is, in Śaṅkara's opinion, the most comprehensive type of legitimate compromise with the realist and pluralist ways of thinking that advaitic thought may justly allow. In the sphere of ethical discipline the only kind of accommodation which Śaṅkara considers reasonable is what is implied in the sādhana-catustaya scheme, namely that while karma may be given the place of greatest importance at the door of even the innermost shrine of advaitic truth, karma in no sense should be co-ordinated with jñāna.

According to Śaṅkara and Sureśvara, a jīvanmukta may continue to live and re-incarnate himself in many a corporeal form through the force of his fructified karma and may attain to kaivalya either on the fall of the body in which he has come by Brahman-realisation or may don other corporeal forms till his fructified karma is exhausted. And in this way of describing a jīvanmukta, Śaṅkara has found a means of continued service in society for those who have reached the pinnacle of knowledge. Maṇḍana, however, is not prepared to go as far as Śaṅkara in regard to the doctrine of jīvanmukti and would make a Brahman-knower, functioning in society, strictly limited to the fall of the body in which he has come by Brahman-knowledge. In regard to sannyāsa, again, Śaṅkara and Sureśvara hold that sannyāsa-āśrama is a better way of reaching the highest goal, than the grhasthāśrama. Maṇḍana, in this matter, accommodates himself more to the common run of mankind and views gṛhasthya as providing a quicker method than sannyāsa, for reaching the highest goal, and Maṇḍana's chief ground is that there is full VIMUKTATMAN, the author of the Iṣṭa-siddhi is far less accommodative than either Maṇḍana or Vācaspatimiśra. The doctrine of Māyā as expounded by Śaṅkara and his immediate followers is amplified as the main theme of his work by Vimuktātman, and this doctrine is rounded off with the view that avidyā-nivṛtti is neither sat nor asat nor both nor anirvacanīya, but a something of the fifth variety. In this view, one may find a clever way in which an advaitic dialectician may accommodate himself to a non-advaitic one.

UDAYANA is treated by Brahmanāndasarasvatī¹ as an Advaitin at heart and the Nyāya-Vaiśeṣika treatises produced by Udayana should be regarded merely as counterblasts to the Buddhist tenets of idealism and nihilism. Some of Udayana's statements in his Ātma-tattvavivēka,

बलिनि वेदनये जयश्रीः ।

सा चावस्था न हेया मोक्षनगरगोपुरायमाणत्वात् ।²

where he refers to Advaita, justify Brahmanānda's view. Udayana's accommodative concern for the vyāvahārika world must have made him suppress his own Advaitic conviction.

ANANDABODHA has simply maintained the accommodative level of Śaṅkara and abandoned some of the compromises introduced by Maṇḍana and adopted by Vācaspati.

¹ See pp. 226-30, Anantakrishna Sastri's edn. of the Advaita-siddhi.

² See Ātmatattvavivēka, Chowkhamba edn., pp. 230 and 451.

SRI HARSA'S Khaṇḍana-khaṇḍa-khāḍya is a full vindication from a polemical viewpoint of all the possibilities and limits of compromise which Śaṅkara's Advaita may allow, with reference to the world of empirical reality. The inexhaustible resources which an Advaitin may command in the direction of accommodation with realist ways of thinking, through the concept of anirvacanīyatva are fully described in the Khaṇḍana-khaṇḍa-khāḍya. In the rationalistic sphere of enquiry, according to Śrī Harṣa, anirvacanīyatva-vāda and the absolute one-ness of cit as recognised by the Advaitins are the only two admissible things; and nothing else would bear scrutiny.¹ Even Śrī Harṣa in Khaṇḍana-khaṇḍa-khāḍya when he places himself on the level of a non-combative, pacific teacher of great truths, becomes very soft and pliable under the influence of the accommodative spirit which he inherited from early advaitic tradition, and points out that the discipline of bhakti is generally necessary for ordinary people as an important step leading to the advaitic goal.²

In the history of Vedāntic thought there are two groups of teachers who seceded from Advaita. One group is headed by RAMANUJA who is solicitous to accommodate his way of monistic thinking on the one side to pluralistic realism, and on the other, to advaitic monism. The crowning achievement of this group is typified in the denomination Viśiṣṭādvaita which has been accepted as the most significant name that could be given to Rāmānuja's school of Vedānta.

¹ See Brahmānandīya, p. 225.

² See Siddhāntabinduṭkā, verse 8.

अशेषचिदचिदात्मकशरीरविशिष्टस्य शरीरिणोऽद्वैतम् ।

Unity of God as the inner spirit, quickening the whole universe, which bears to Him the same relation that the body of an individual bears to the embodied Jīva. Through the idea that Brahman is the inner self of the Jīva and the material world, Rāmānuja seeks to safeguard the claims of non-dualism and dualism. In the final state of release, Rāmānuja recognises the possibility of a mukta-jīva realising Brahmānanda. As Appayya Dīkṣita has pointed out,¹ this is in the direction of compromise with the Advaitin's doctrine and if pressed further, would only result in the recognition of the identity of the Jīva with Brahman. It is easy to see how this result would follow. One's ānanda cannot, for obvious reasons, be experienced by another.

Another group of seceders from Advaita, showing a somewhat unaccommodative attitude, is headed by the strongest and the boldest of India, viz. MADHVACARYA. As Appayya Dīkṣita himself points out, even the Dvaita mode of thinking cannot entirely shake off its leanings in favour of Advaita. This may be seen in the manner in which what the Dvaitins call sanmukti would entitle a sanmukta to become absorbed into the body of Nārāyaṇa and to experience all His delights through His indriyas.²

¹ In his Ānandalahari, Bharati Mandiram Sanskrit Series, p. 146.

² Ibid. pp. 145—6 and Madhvācārya's Brahma-sūtra-bhāṣya IV. iv. 5.

¹APPAYYA DIKSITA, the renowned polymath¹ of the sixteenth century, has clearly shown in his Ānanda-lahari how the advaitic scheme of thought and discipline may be accommodated completely to the viśiṣṭādvaitic scheme through the device of treating saguṇa-brahman as the intermediate purport (avāntara-tātparya) of vedāntic texts, and nirguṇa-brahman as the ultimate purport. Only his pre-established Śaiva obsessions have made him restrict this kind of accommodation to the Viśiṣṭādvaita thought in the Śrīkaṇṭha-bhāṣya and unwilling to extend it to the teachings of the Śrībhāṣya.

MADHUSUDANA SARASVATI AND BRAHMANANDA SARASVATI are the greatest champions of Advaita dialectics. Madhusūdana seeks to harmonise all the systems of thought and religion through the great accommodative device of difference in fitness (adhikāra-bheda) and rounds off the ladder theory put forward by Sarva-jñātman.

सर्वेषां च संक्षेपेण त्रिविध एव प्रस्थानभेदः । तत्र आरम्भ-वाद एकः, परिणामवादो द्वितीयः, विवर्तवादस्तृतीयः ।....सर्वेषां प्रस्थान-कर्तृणां मुनीनां विवर्तवादपर्यवसानेन अद्वितीये परमेश्वरे एव प्रतिपाद्ये तात्पर्यम् । न हि ते मुनयो भ्रान्ताः, सर्वज्ञत्वात्तेषाम् । किन्तु बहिर्विषयप्रवणानामापाततः पुरुषार्थे प्रवेशो न संभवतीति नास्तिक्य-वारणाय तैः प्रकारभेदाः प्रदर्शिताः ।

(Prasthānabheda, p. 10. Ānandāśrama edn.)

¹ Here the late Professor had proposed to add a paragraph about VIJÑANABHIKSU.

Having perched himself high on the advaitic peak of nirākāra-vāda, Madhusūdanasarasvatī feels nervous, and his thought seeks emotional comfort in giving vent to his bhakti impulse in the famous verse he composed at the end of the nirākāra-vāda section of the Advaita-siddhi.

वंशीविभूषितकराञ्जनीरदामात् पीताम्बरादरुणविम्बफलाधरोष्ठात् । पूर्णन्दुमुन्दरमुखादरविन्दनेत्रात् कृष्णात्परं किमपि तत्त्वमहं न जाने ॥

(p. 750).

Further, he considers it perfectly legitimate to effect a compromise between the bhakti ideal as presented in the Gītā and the Bhāgavata with the advaitic ideal of Brahman-realisation. This harmonious adjustment he secures through the account he has given of bhakti as the highest rasa, in his famous work called the Bhakti-rasāyana. And in this connection, he naturally presses into his service the pliable text of the Taittirīya Upaniṣad रसा वै सः¹. Within the sphere of the advaitic school of Vedāntins, Madhusūdanasarasvatī prefers to show a high degree of accommodativeness to the views of accommodative Advaitins like Maṇḍana and Vācaspati, as well as the uncompromising Advaitins of the type of Sureśvara. Brahmānandasarasvatī mostly endorses Madhusūdanasarasvatī's views and develops further some of the accommodative theories. In this connection, Brahmānanda's amplification of Maṇḍana's bhāvādvaita and justification of it deserve attention. (p. 326). In regard to some matters like jīvanmukti, Brahmānanda is not so accommodative as Maṇḍana or Śaṅkara himself. (Brahmānandīya pp. 252, 255).

¹ Bhagavadbhaktirasāyana, Achyutagranthamālā edn., Benares, III. 22-24, pp. 142-4.

So far we have been considering various instances of compromise in the history of advaitic thought. It would be difficult to decide which of them are wholly legitimate and which wholly illegitimate. As John Morley¹ has pointed out, a wise suspense in forming opinions, a wise reserve in expressing them, and a wise tardiness in trying to realise them—these are the three provinces of compromise, and they should be differentiated carefully “from unavowed disingenuousness and self-illusion, from voluntary dissimulation and from indolence and pusillanimity”. It should also be pointed out here that there is a fourth distinction which Deussen has pointed out, though omitted by Morley; and it is unintentional accommodation as distinguished from intentional accommodation. And all the three distinctions pointed out by Morley come under the category of intentional accommodation. The quest for truth is a very complex process of thinking and most of the accommodative devices which thought itself spontaneously introduces should generally be considered legitimate and unintentional, even in cases where such accommodative devices result from the exhaustion of the rationalistic resources, after all possible effort.

¹ “On compromise”, pp. 4, 88.

Some difficulty arises particularly in the pleas for compromise implied in the Gītā theory of loka-saṁgraha and in the idea of provisional usefulness advocated by the author of the Prasthānabheda through his ladder theory. Hume says "It is putting too great a respect on the vulgar and their superstitions to pique one's self on sincerity with regard to them.....I wish it were still in my power to be a hypocrite in this particular." Morley criticises Hume's attitude and describes it as a revolting case of moral improbity and soul-less cynicism. What would Morley say to Bhagavān Kṛṣṇa's plea of loka-saṁgraha? Certainly he would approve of it, if he believes, like most of us, that the teacher of the Gītā knows everything about what contributes to individual and social well-being, and he would not certainly regard it as a case of voluntary dissimulation or an instance of indolence and pusillanimity. In evaluating the instances of intentional compromise described in these lectures, it would be useful to remember the distinction between what may be called a courageous compromise and what may be called a timid compromise. For instance, in estimating the compromise for which Maṇḍana is responsible, it may be pointed out that in adopting a reasonable compromise with the Mīmāṃsakas by assigning to karma and upāsana their due place in his scheme of Brahman-realisation, Maṇḍana has shown a rare courage by fearlessly preferring to remain a sweetly reasonable accommodative and eclectic type of Advaitin, not caring for the plaudits he might have gained by following Śaṅkara closely.

One word more. The boundaries of compromise are set clearly by Manu in his memorable dictum satyam brūyāt, etc. The interests of truth can never be sacrificed to what is priya, what is good and beautiful and helpful. In the sphere of thought, word and deed, truth must be maintained at all costs. All legitimate concessions that can possibly be made whenever there is a clash between what is true and what is good and agreeable must be made, and it must always be remembered that in determining what is satya and what is priya, the society as a whole matters as much as the individual concerned. I cannot more appropriately wind up these lectures than by quoting again Manu's words with the two emendations which I would like to make for brūyāt, namely, kuryāt and dhyāyet.

सत्यं ब्रूयात्प्रियं ब्रूयान्न ब्रूयात्सत्यमप्रियम् । प्रियं च नानृतं ब्रूयादेष धर्मस्सनातनः ॥
 सत्यं कुर्यात्प्रियं कुर्यान्न कुर्यात्सत्यमप्रियम् । प्रियं च नानृतं कुर्यादेष धर्मस्सनातनः ॥
 सत्यं ध्यायेत्प्रियं ध्यायेन्न ध्यायेत्सत्यमप्रियम् । प्रियं च नानृतं ध्यायेदेष धर्मस्सनातनः ॥

INDEXES

SANSKRIT QUOTATIONS

	Pages
अजे साम्ये तु ये केचित्	22
अथात आदेशो नेति नेति	8
अद्वातममनादृत्य	28
अध्यारोपापवादाम्याम्	18
अमृतं सत्येन छन्नम्	8
अशेषचिदचिदात्मक	32
आनन्दो विषयानुभवः	28
आनीदवातं स्वधया तदेकम्	3
एकं सद् विप्रा बहुधा वदन्ति	3
कर्मणैव हि संसिद्धिम्	13
ज्योतिषां ज्योतिः	10
तत्त्वमसि	24
तम आसीत् तमसा गूह्यमग्रे	4
दुर्दर्शमतिगंभीरम्	23
देवान् भावयतानेन	13
न बुद्धिभेदं जनयेत्	19
न विरोधो न चोत्पत्तिः	22

	Pages
नूनं ते नासिकाग्रेण	28
नैवात्मनः प्रभुरयम्	15
बालिनि वेदनये जयश्रीः	30
यदुक्तम् अहंकारममकारौ	19
यद्यदाचरति श्रेष्ठः	13
या निर्धृतिस्तनुभृताम्	14
रसो वै सः	34
बंशीविभूषितकरात्	34
विज्ञानम् आनन्दं ब्रह्म	9
विमुक्तश्च विमुच्यते	11
विवर्तवादस्य हि पूर्वभूमिः	29
सक्ताः कर्मण्यविद्वांसः	13
सत्यं ज्ञानमनन्तम्	9
सत्यं ब्रूयात् प्रियं ब्रूयात्	6.37
सत्यस्य सत्यम्	8.26
सर्वे खल्विदं ब्रह्म	10
सर्वेषां च संक्षेपेण	33
सा चावस्था न हेया	30
स्वयंज्योतिः पुरुषः	10
स्वसिद्धान्तव्यवस्थासु	22

WORKS AND AUTHORS—SANSKRIT

	Pages
Advaita siddhi	30.34
Appayyadikṣita	16.32.33
Ālmatattvaviveka	30
Ānandabodha	16.30
Anandalahari	32.33
Iṣṭasiddhi	30
Udayana	16.30
Rgveda	3.4.5.12
Kaṭha upaniṣad	11
Karmamimāṃsāsūtras	16
Kumārila	16.19
Kṛṣṇa, Bhagavān Śrī	14.15.36
Khāṇḍanakhaṇḍakhāḍya	31
Gītā	10.12-14.19.34.36
Gauḍapāda	16.21-23
Gauḍapāḍakārikā	21.22
Chāndogya upaniṣad	6.8.10
Jaimini	16.17
Tantravārttika	19
Taraṅgini	24
Taittirīya upaniṣad	9.34
Naīskarmyasiddhi	16.28
Nyāyāmṛta	24.25
Padmapāda	16.28
Pañcapādikā	28
Prabhākara	16.29
Praśna upaniṣad	26
Prasthāna bheda	33.36
Bādarāyaṇa	16.17
Br̥hati	19
Br̥hadāraṇyaka upaniṣad	6.8.9.10
Br̥hadāraṇyaka-vārttika	28
Brahmadatta	16.20

	Pages
Brahmasiddhi	21.24.25
Brahmasūtras	16.26
Brahmasūtrabhāṣya (Madhvācārya)	32
Brahmasūtrabhāṣya (Śaṅkara)	26
Brahmānandasarasvatī	3.16.30.33.35
Brahmānandīya	31.35
Bhagavadbhaktirasāyana	34
Bhakti-prapañca	16.20
Bhakti-rhari	23.25
Bhāgavata, śrīmat	14.15.34
Bhāmati	29
Bhāskara	20
Mandanamiśra	16.23-25.27.30.34.37
Madhusūdanasarasvatī	16.33.34
Madhvācārya	16.32
Manu	5.37
Manusmṛti	6
Mahānārāyaṇa upaniṣad	11
Yājñavalkya	8.9.10
Rāmānuja	16.31.32
Vācaspatimiśra	16.28-30.34
Vijñānabhikṣu	16.33
Vimuktātman	16.30
Veda	16
Vedāntasūtra	17
Śaṅkara	16.17.18.21.25-8.30.31.35.37
Śaṅkarabhāṣya	26
Śrīkaṇṭhabhāṣya	33
Śrībhāṣya	33
Śrī-Harṣa	3.16.31
Śrutaprakāśikā	18
Śrutis	6
Slokavārttika	19
Svetāśvatara upaniṣad	11
Saṁkṣepaśārīraka	29
Sarvajñātman	16.29.33
Sāyana	4
Siddhantabinduṭīkā	31

	Pages
Sudarśanabhaṭṭa	18
Sureśvara	16.17.27.29.34

ENGLISH

Deussen	7.9.10.35
Hiriyanna, M	17.21
Hume	36
Journal of Oriental Research , the	17.21
Max Muller	5.12
Morley, John	2.35.36
On Compromise	2.35
Philosophy of Bhedābheda , the	20
Philosophy of the Upaniṣads , the	7.9.10
Srinivasacharya, P.N.	20

SUBJECT—SANSKRIT

akhyāti	29
agnihotra	25
ajñāna	25
advaya-yoga	25
advaita	30.31
adhikāra-bheda	33
adhyāropa	18.19
adhyāsa	19.25
anirvacariya	26.30
anirvacanīya-khyāti	24.29
anirvacaniyatva	31
anirvacaniyatva-vāda	31
anṛta	25
anyathā-khyāti	23.29
apara-vidyā	26
apavāda	18
abhāva-dvaita	25
avāntara-tātparya	33
avidyā	24
avidyā-dhvaṁsa	24
avidyā-nivṛtti	30
avirodha-yoga	22

	Pages
avivāda-yoga	22
asat	30
asat-khyāti	29
ātma-jñāna	14
ātman	8.26
ātma-vāda	19
ānanda	9.10.32
ārambha-vāda	29
indiryas (of God)	32
īśvara	15
upāsana	24.36
eka-vākyatā	16.17
karman	12.21.36
karma-kāṇḍa	16.18
karmāṅga	17
kāmapradhvanṣa-vādinah	17.18
kaivalya	27
gṛhastha-āśrama	27
gārhaṣṭhya	27
cit	9.10.31
Janaka	13
jaran-māyā-vādīnah	18
jīva	20.21.32
jīvan-mukta	27
jīvan-mukti	11.35
jñāna	12.17.18.21
jñāna-karma-samuccaya	25
jñāna-kāṇḍa	16.18
taṃsa	4
tucchya	4
devayāna	11
dvaita	17
dhyāna	17
dhyāna-niyoga-vāda	21
nāma-rūpa-ātmaka-prapañca	3
Nārāyaṇa (God)	32
nīrākāra-vāda	34
nirguṇa-brahman	23.33

	Pages
nirdvandva-yoga	22
niṣprapañca	18
nyāya-vaiśeṣika	30
paraspara-bhāvanā	5.12
para-vidyā	26
pariṇāma-vāda	29
pāramārthika-sattā	8.26
prapañca	25
prapañca-abhāva	24
pravṛtti	25
prasamkhyāna	24
priya	5.37
bimba-pratibimba-bhāva	15
brahman	8.29.33
brahman, saguṇa and nirguṇa	33
brahma-vādins	16
brahma-sākṣātkāra	24
brahmādvaita	25
brahmānanda	32
brāhmaṇas	17
bhakti	12.31.34
bhāva-advaita	24.25.35
bheda-abheda	20
bheda-abheda-vāda	20
bheda-abheda-vādins	20
manas, vāk, kāya	5
mahāvākya	25
māyā	3.30
mukta	11
mukta-jīva	32
mukti	11
mithyā	26
yogaśāstra (Gītā)	12
lokasaṅgraha	12.36
videha-mukti	11
viparītakhyāti	23
vivarta-vāda	29
vivāda	5

viii

	Pages
viśiṣṭādvaita	17.31
vedānta-darśana	6
vyāvahārika	30
vyāvahārika-sattā	8.26
śabda	24
śabda-advaita	23.25
śaiva	33
saguna-brahman	33
saccidānanda	9.10
saccidānanda-rūpa-brahman	10
sat	9.10.30
sat-tarka	22
satya	5.8.25.37
sad-asad-vilakṣaṇa-bhāva-rūpa-ajñāna	4
sannyāsa	27
sannyāsa-āśrama	27
san-mukta	32
san-mukti	32
śamatva-yoga	22
samanvaya	16.17
samuccaya-vāda	21
sampratipatti	5
samvāda	5
sādhana-catustaya	27

ENGLISH

absolute, attributeless	23
absolute real, realisation of	24
absorption	5
absorption in Lord's body	32
accommodation	2.4.5.7.10.11.19.26.27.29ff
evaluation of	8.35-37
forced	17.18
in Rāmānuja	31
intentional and unintentional	7.35
legitimate	8.25
to theism	26
with realism	31

	Pages
accommodationist	28
accommodative	37
advaitins	34
concern	30
device	33.35
formulas	8
level	30
processes	9.17.18
reasonableness	28
spirit	5.8.25.29.31
theories	35
accommodativeness	28.34
acosmic	18
adaptation	17
adjustment	2.5.8.23.34
advaita	17.18.24.29
acosmic form of	18.19.20
dialectics	33
doctrine	10.17.19.21
intuition of	21
post-upaniṣadic	18
Śāṅkara form of	21
secession from	3.31.32
suppression of	3.31.32
upaniṣadic tradition of	23
advaitic absolute	10
conviction	30
dialectician	30
doctrine of identity of	14
epistemology	23
ethics	23
goal	31
ideal	14.20.34
idealism	11
literature	24
monism	31
ontology	22
scheme	23

	Pages
of thought and life	22.33
its accommodation with viśiṣṭādvaita	32.33
synthesis	10
teachers, greatest of	25
theory	1.2.3ff
of jīva as reflection of Brahman	15
thought	1.2.3.21.22.23.26.27ff
highest peak of	21.22
history of	35
integrity of	28
tradition	31
truth	11.20.27
works	4
advaitin	22.24.29.30.31
accommodative	34
doctrine of	32
eclectic type of	37
later	16
old	16
prē-Śaṅkara	21
Rāmānuja's compromise with	32
resources of	31
uncompromising	34
advaitism	28
agreeable, the	5
anachronism	4
ancient Indian texts, interpretation of	7
aṅṛta and satya	25
antithesis of karma and jñāna	25
ātman
eternally mukta	11
identity of universe with	11
intuitive knowledge of	11
the only reality	19
attachment	13.14
without	13
avidyā
jīva the locus of	24

	Pages
viṣaya of	24
nivṛtti, of extra-ordinary nature	30
beautiful, the	5.37
being	9
benefit	2
bhakti, bhaktiyoga	14.31.34
adjusted to jñāna	14
as highest rasa	34
discipline of	31
elevation of	14
important step	31
legitimate compromise with jñāna	34
Madhusūdanasarasvatī and	34
bhāṣyakāras	17
bhāṭṭas	23
bhāṭṭa school	19
bliss	9
bondage	22
brahman	8-10 14.19-21.24.26
absorption in	21
āśraya and viṣaya of	24
identity of jīva with	14.32
incomprehensible	8.9
knower	27
knowledge	27
place of karma and upāsana in the realisation of prapañca and	25
realisation	36
union with	15.20.21.25.26.27.34
Brahma sūtras	11
Buddhist tenets of idealism and nihilism	20
causality	30
three theories of	10.29
causation	29
cit, one-ness of	29
clash between the true and the good	37
cognition, erroneous	31
	23

	Pages
indirect	24.25
verbal	25
compromise	2.3.4.5ff
admissible ways of	17
boundaries of	37
courageous	36
evaluation of	2.6.35-37
far-reaching type of	22
four provinces of	35
illegitimate	2.35
legitimate	2.12.26.34.35
limits of	31
pre-Sankara	21
spirit of	5
timid	36
with empirical modes of thinking	11
concession	10
legitimate	37
reasonable	26
conciliation	2
conformity	2
consciousness	9.10
conservation of Hinduism	11
contemplation of jiva-brahman identity	21
continuity of Hinduism	11
co-ordination of karma and jñāna	21
creationistic view	29
cultural life of India	5
distinctive features of	5
growth of	5
cultural traditions of India	7
cynicism	36
dedicated work	28
dedication	12.14
devotion	12.15
difference-cum-identity	20
difference in fitness	33
differences	25.26

	Pages
differences, minimised and adjusted	2
disingenuousness	35
dissimulation, voluntary	35, 36
dissolution	22
doing, sphere of	5
dualism	32
dvaita	24, 32
its bearings towards advaita	32
writers	24
dvaitins	32
early post-vedic stage	11, 12
eclectic	37
economy	2
emancipation	11
empirical attributes	8
negation of	8
reality	29, 31
sphere	26
world	8
emotional comforts	34
qualification	2
ens-monism	24
environments	20
epic age	11-15
epistemological attitude	29
eschatalogical theories	11
ethical discipline	27
ethics, advaitic	23
exegesis, principles of	16
expediency	2
experimental knowledge	8
faith	14
final state	32
fitness, differences in	33
Gītā as yogaśāstra	12
most potent factor in Hinduism	12
'give and take'	5
goal, highest	27

	Pages
God, unity of	32
good, the	5.37
gratification, emotional	2
great men	13
followed by the world	13
sets up a standard	13
Greece	9
growth	11
of Hinduism	11
harmony	22
harmonious adjustments	34
harmonising all systems	33
helpful, the	37
henopatism	12
henotheism	5.12
Hinduism
conservation of	11
continuity of	11
Gītā, the most potent factor in	12
growth of	11
Hindu scriptures	14
society	9
historical criticism	3
hypocrite	36
idealism	10.11.30
idealistic principle	10
identity of ātman and universe	10
of God and man	14
of jīva and brahman	32
ignorant minds	13
unsettlement of	13.14
imagination	4
India	9
cultural life of	5
cultural traditions of	7
Indian scholars	6.7
thought, its traditions ignored by some scholars	6.7
indolence, not compromise	35.36
injunction(s)	18.21

	Pages
insight, true	12
intellectualism	9.10
interpretation, principles of	16
jīva
identical with brahman	14.21.32
locus of avidyā	24
origination from brahman of	21
reflection of Brahman	15
jñāna	25.27
antithesis with karman	25.27
Kantian	7
karman
antithesis with jñāna of	25
discipline of	21
ladder theory	29.33.36
late vedic period	6
late post-vedic period	16
liberation	21
'live and let live'	5
makeshifts, outgrowing	18
man, inner nature of	10
mankind, common run of	27
many, the	4
and the one	25
mediacy	24
meditation	24
meditative process	17
meeting together	5
mental process	17
merger	28
mīmāṃsakas	19.36
pro-advaitic bent of	19
monism	5
monistic absolute	3
scheme	20
way of thinking	31
onotheism	5
oral bankruptcy	19

	Pages
self-delusion	35
selfless work	14.28
self-realisation	14.17
self, sublimation of	18
sentence-unity	16
service, dedicated	12.14
to society	27
social well-being	36
society, criterion of the good	37
functioning in	27
service to	27
soul, supreme and individual	11
space	29
sphere of thought, word and deed	5.37
spirit, inner	32
superstitions	36
suppositious make-shift	18
synthesis	2.5.12
systems of thought and religion	33
thamaturgy	6
theism, emergence of	11
theistic sentiments	24.26
thinking, sphere of	5
thought-unity	16
time	29
tolerance	5
traditional culture of India	7
traditions of Indian thought	6
transfigurationistic view	29
transformationistic view	29
trans-moral	14
truth	2.5
interests of	2.37
quest for	17.35
unaccommodative attitude	32
uncompromising	28
unity	20
unity of God	32

	Pages
of sentence	16
universe, world	32
body of God	32
healthy advancement of	12
identical with ātman	11
manifold	10
orderly maintenance of	12.13
realistic view of	10
reality of	10
upaniṣad (s)	6.7.8.9.17.18.25.26
age of	6
central teaching of	21
earliest	11
later	8.11
philosophy of	7
poetic style in	8
vedāntic	11
upaniṣadic accommodation	11
advaita	21
age	2
doctrine	17
teachers, philosophers,	8.9.10
farsightedness of	9
thought	8.10
tradition	23
vaiyākaraṇa philosophers	23
vedānta, Rāmānuja school of	32
vedāntic texts	25
import of	24
intermediate purport of	33
ultimate purport of	33
thinking, thought	7.31
upaniṣads	6.7.10
vedāntins	19
advaitic school of	34
pre-Sāṅkara	23
vedāntists	7
later	8

	Pages
vedic period	1.2.3
viśiṣṭādvaita, meaning of the name	32
, scheme of	33
void	4
vulgar, the	36
well-being, individual and social	36
work, dedicated and selfless	28
work (s) (karman)	13.14
world (see also universe)	20.22
body of God	32
important for all practical purposes	26
of empirical reality, vyāvahārika	30.31
transcending the	18
worship	15
of God equal to worship of self	15

OUR OWN PUBLICATIONS

				Rs.	A.	P.
1.	Vibhrama Viveka of Maṇḍana Misra	6	12	0
2.	Viṇāvāsavadatta	0	.	0
3.	Tolkāppiyam Vol. I	1	0	0
4.	Do. Vol. II Part I	2	0	0
5.	History of Grammatical Theories in Tamil			6	0	0
6.	Dhvanyāloka Uddyota I	8	0	0
7.	The Kuppuswami Sastri Commemoration Volume	3	0	0
8.	Highways and Byways of Literary Criticism in Sanskrit	2	0	0
9.	The Journal of Oriental Research— Annual Subscription	6	0	0

The Kuppuswami Sastri Research Institute, Sanskrit College, Mylapore, Madras